Draw a line from the train in the left column to the words in the right column. You can place two lines in the left column for the words in the right column.
It doesn't look like, but it's easy. It's not a skill, but watch the pictures. It's not like you can't do it.

Draw a line from the fruit in the left column to the matching fruit in the right column. Then draw a line from the pet in the left column to the matching pet in the right column.

If you don't like fruit, don't match the fruit. If you don't like pets, don't match the pets. If you don't like both, match them both anyway.

Many people with learning disabilities have trouble with letters and words. They have difficulty processing the information correctly.

This is not a developmental disability.

Learning disabilities may mildly, moderately or severely impair the learning process.

It does not mean someone can't learn.

It may take longer to grasp or interpret a concept or phrase, but many times it can be done.

Be patient, flexible and realistic when working with someone with a learning disability.
